Abstract: The problem of social protection and of social work services has been under public debate in Romania lately. A series of dysfunctions at macroeconomic level has worsened this problem: In what degree is the state responsible for the social protection of the social-economically active or passive citizens? Must it assume an absolute role or transfer a part of its responsibilities to other sectors of society/community? Are the theoretical and ideological premises no longer valid? These questions are essential, especially when a relatively new field is being created in Romania, that of social work. The possible answers are given by applied approaches, such as the European financing projects, for example the “European Qualifications and Standardization within the Social Work Field – Acronym Eur- As” project.
